

Charlotta Bass, editor of The California Eagle, and the World War II workers for whose jobs she fought, are featured in “Women and the Labor Movement in California,” a 7' x 60' mural painted in 1991 by muralist Eva Cockcroft. Honoring women workers and organizers, the mural also contains portraits of political and labor organizer Dorothy Healey (left), International Ladies Garment Workers Union leader Rose Pesotta (center left), United Farm Workers Vice President Dolores Huerta and agricultural workers leader Luisa Moreno (center right). It graces the front exterior of the Southern California Library for Social Studies and Research in South Central Los Angeles. The Library preserves the history of labor, peace, social justice and other progressive movements.
